The Treaty of Amiens temporarily ended hostilities between the France and Britain during the Napoleonic Wars. A preling agreement was signed in London on 30 September 1901 by Lord Hawkesbury (Britain) and Louis Guillaume Otto (Franche Definitive Treaty of Peace was signed at Amiens in France on 25 March 1802 by Joseph Bonaparte (Napoléon's broand the Marquess Cornwallis (Britain). The Peace of Amiens lasted only 14 months and the uneasy truce ended when declared war on France on 18 May 1803.

The Napoleonic Wars and the Treaty of Amiens in particular had a major influence in the early development of South At 1652 the Dutch East India Company (VOC) had established a settlement in Table Bay. By 1795 the settlement had effe become a Dutch colony extending over the present-day Western Cape Province but still governed by VOC and had attavital strategic importance internationally in the sea trade between Europe and the Far East. In that year The Netherland the French army under the leadership of Napoléon Bonaparte and was restructured as a French client-state called the Republic. Prince William V of Orange fled to Britain and a campaign was launched to secure Dutch colonial possession falling into French hands. Britain dispatched an expeditionary force to the Cape led by Vice-Admiral Sir George Keith Elphinstone and with troops under the command of General Sir James Henry Craig. The outcome, after the battle of Mu and skirmishes between June and September, was that the Dutch Governor Abraham Josias Sluysken surrendered the the British.

The significant part of the Treaty of Amiens for South Africa was that British should hand back the Cape to the Dutch. T transfer took place in February 1803 and the Cape became an official Dutch colony of the Batavian Republic under Commissioner-General Jacob Abraham de Mist and the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, Lieutenant-General Jan Janssens. These two men brought enlightenment to the new Colony and instituted reforms in government, agriculture, t coinage, settlement, religion and race relations.

The collapse of the Treaty in May 1903 put the Dutch sovereignty of the Colony under threat. However, the strength of a French Navy deterred any action by the British. The Battle of Trafalgar on 21 October 1805, in which Admiral Lord Nels defeated the combined navies of France and Spain, changed the balance of sea power. The defence of the Cape could longer adequately be supported and British warships were sent to recapture the Cape. At the Battle of Blaauwberg near Town on 8 January 1806 the British commander, Lt Gen Sir David Baird, gained a decisive victory and the Articles of Capitulations were signed by Governor Janssens on 18 January. British forces occupied the Cape until 13 August 1814 the Netherlands ceded the colony to Britain as a permanent possession. It remained a British colony until it was incorporated the Union of South Africa on 31 May 1910.
